

Chapter 9

A Dream of Akshar Purushottam Maharaj

Once, Ganesh Bhakta told Yogi Maharaj, “Shastriji Maharaj is such a powerful Satpurush! While staying in Vartal, he installed the Akshar Purushottam murtis in Vadhwan. Those murtis are beautiful.” Yogi Maharaj, who was preparing rotlis in the kitchen, stopped suddenly and began to pepper Ganesh Bhakta with questions to learn more about this interesting incident. Guru Ganesh Bhakta narrated the entire event and explained the unparalleled greatness of Shastriji Maharaj. Which disciple would not be delighted to hear of his guru’s glory? Yogi Maharaj thought, “When will I be able to have darshan of Akshar Purushottam Maharaj in the Vadhwan mandir?”

Yogi Maharaj’s wish became a reality that night when he had darshan of Vadhwan’s Akshar Purushottam Maharaj murtis in his dream. Akshar Purushottam Maharaj had donned all white clothes, including white survals and white Jamnagar-style turbans. The next morning, Yogi Maharaj joyously shared his dream with a delighted Ganesh Bhakta.

A few days later, Yogi Maharaj happened to go to Vadhwan with Vignandas Swami, where he had darshan of Akshar Purushottam Maharaj in the mandir. Joy permeated Yogi Maharaj's entire being, as the clothes and ornaments adorning the murtis in the mandir were just as he had seen in his dream. Later, Yogi Maharaj would often recount this incident, saying:

“When Ganesh Bhakta brought it up in Mojidad, I had wondered what must the murtis of Akshar Purushottam Maharaj in Vadhwan look like? That very night I had darshan of those murtis in my dream. Then, when I actually went to Vadhwan mandir, the darshan I had in the mandir exactly matched the darshan I had in my dream. Maharaj had worn a white Jamnagar-style turban.”

Why would Shriji Maharaj not fulfill all of Yogi Maharaj’s wishes when he constantly contemplated on Shriji Maharaj in all three states—waking, dream, and deep sleep?
